REPLY.

Dear Sir:—Nothing can be more gratifying than the honor of having succeeded in gaining the approbation and good will of the people of one of the most important constituencies in the country. I have great pleasure in accepting the nomination alluded to in your request. The next Legislative Assembly will probably be the most important that has yet been called into existence, and it behooves all good men to be vigilant, and to exert their powers to insure the successful working of Parliamentary Government.

It may be found well in practice to remember that the misrepresentations of those designing men, who so lavishly asserted that you were not qualified to exercise political functions with advantage to yourselves or to the country, have been signally refuted, and that twelve years of misgovernment proves most conclusively that they were not competent to hold, or exercise, the office of government with advantage or safety to the country.

Experience shows that it were vain to expect political improvement from men in whose official career it is not the least material progress, who are not identified with their people, and who are not animated by a desire for the advancement of the country. I confess that when speculating on the causes which led to the disastrous retrogression of the past, I am puzzled to account for the long continuance of a political system, to which it is impossible to attach any other name than that of a much untried and untried system, containing within itself such active elements of ruin, which have been expected to put an end to its existence much sooner. Nor indeed is this all.

It will be the duty of future legislators, in their post mortem examination of the late

Voting by Ballot.

After many years of persistent agitation on the part of a few men of advanced political ideas, in favor of the adoption of the ballot in lieu of the open system of voting at elections in Great Britain, their efforts appear now about to be crowned with deserved success. The ruling class in England is essentially conservative in its instincts, and has never been known to acquiesce in any measure of reform, however desirable, until the pressure of public opinion becomes irresistible. So with the ballot. At every step the friends of this measure have been met with the most determined opposition from those whose interests lay in the direction of open voting, inasmuch as the landed proprietor, the manufacturer, the merchant, and the gentleman of elegant leisure with wealthy money-bags, were in a position thereby to control the political feelings of the laboring classes by the means of a preponderant influence in the councils of the nation. Nothing daunted by defeat, however, the advocates of the ballot year by year renewed the attack, always with an augmented force, until finally, sound principle on the one hand and weight of numbers on the other, broke down the barriers of the opposition and compelled the Government to take the matter in hand and introduce a measure making voting by ballot at municipal and general elections the law of the land. It is not our purpose to enter upon a review of the arguments for and against this measure indulged in by the English press and by those who took part in the debate upon the question in the House of Commons, but we would just remark, en passant, that so far as we have had opportunity to peruse the enunciations of writers and speakers on the subject, the force of logic and weight of argument are largely in favor of the ballot. To the principle of the ballot as a means by which to exercise the franchise, we have given our support, as being to all intents and purposes better adapted to the obtaining of a fair and unbiased representation of the popular will in the choice of persons to serve in the capacity of legislators than the old system of open voting. But so wedded have the people of this country been to English traditions and precedents, that heretofore it were next to useless to moot the question of its adoption as a part of our political system with any hope of success. In rejection by the law making power of England was quite sufficient to insure its defeat in our own legislature. Now, however, that the question has assumed the dignity of a government measure in England, and will certainly become law, we would venture to hope that the day is not very far distant when the question shall be taken up in our own legislature and an act passed inaugurating the principle of voting by ballot in lieu of that which now prevails. The object of legislation on this subject should be as far as is possible to relieve the elector from all undue influence or pressure calculated to interfere with the untrammelled exercise of his right to cast his vote in whatever way his conscience may dictate or his interest prompt. Despite existing laws to the contrary, bribery, intimidation, and corruption characterize all our elections to an extent which calls loudly for a remedy. It is not the man of intellectual worth, of political experience, of moral reputation, and tried integrity who, as a rule, are made the recipients of popular favors at the polls, but the men with well lined purses, who use their wealth to prostitute their poorer neighbors, and by a well-defined system of bribery and other corrupt influences attain to positions of trust and responsibility for which in point of experience and acquirements they are totally disqualified. We do not mean to say that wealth should not exercise a legitimate influence in the political contests of the country, but that its power as a means to corrupt the masses should be curtailed so far as wholesome legislation can be brought to bear in that direction. To our mind the ballot offers the most effectual remedy for the cure of the evils referred to. We do not believe that any scheme that could possibly be devised would entirely put a stop to corrupt practices at elections, any more than that all men could be transformed from sinners to saints by act of parliament; but as the ballot enables the elector to cast his vote unknown to anyone but himself, the inducement for the moneyer to invest his dollars either in direct or indirect bribery would be materially diminished, because he would naturally come to the conclusion that if an elector was base enough to barter his vote for a money or other consideration, it would not be safe to trust him, least he should both pocket his money and vote against him. Voting by ballot is a universal practice throughout Europe and America in all organizations of men for the election of officers, viz., Masons, Odd Fellows, Temperance Associations, Trades Unions, etc., and why a principle which is so universally adopted as sound in the conduct of private affairs among men should not be equally sound when applied to the more public and important affairs of the body politic, is a question we have yet to see satisfactorily answered in the negative. There is one feature in the English Bill which will commend itself to the better judgment of all classes of the community, as being admirably calculated to work a reduction in the ordinary costs of an election contest, so as to make it possible for the man of limited means to aspire to a seat in the House of Commons. Heretofore the costs of an election contest have been so heavy, owing to the various schemes adopted to secure money out of candidates, that none but even of ample fortunes dared venture to think of such a thing. The Bill provides that hereafter all legitimate costs and charges accruing during an election contest instead of being chargeable to the respective candidates and paid out of their private means, shall be chargeable to the ratepayers of the city, town, or riding for which the election is held, and shall be collected in the same manner as other rates are collected. This is just as it should be, and the effect of this wise provision will be to teach lessons of economy to the electors on the one hand, and make it possible for the poor but otherwise capable men, to share the honors as well as the toils of legislation with their more wealthy neighbors. We not only hope to see the principle of voting by ballot adopted in British Columbia, but that the principle of taxing the districts sending representatives to the Legislative Assembly for the legitimate expenses of elections, instead of compelling candidates to bear the entire burden of cost, may also become a leading feature of the election law here, as it is about to become in the mother country.

Our Quesselle Correspondence.

QUESSILLE, Aug. 6th, 1871.
EDITOR STANDARD.—From two men who arrived to-day we learn that the new trail from Stewart's Lake to Germanen Creek has been cut through. They came down on it and made the through trip to this place from Germanen Creek in twelve days. They say that from Stewart's Lake into the creek, it is first rate, and with plenty of feed and water for animals. Provisions for some time before they left, were pretty high, but with the finishing of the trail, two or three pack trains got in which sent them down a little. A good many there, are pretty hard up, but hold out for the water to fall, believing there is plenty of gold there. We are all here glad that this trail has been finished at last, as it cuts off a long bond, and some ferrage on the lakes. Altogether the prospect, of the country are promising, and if Omineca keeps good it will open a large field for enterprise. The surveying parties are here yet busy getting boats ready to start on their expedition. There is nothing else stirring; business was quiet for some time, but is now improving. B. C.
